

Against All Gods: What's Right and Wrong About the New Atheism

119 pages, paperback, 0-8308-3738-8, $15.00

Available April 2010

"Rather than engaging in specific critiques of the new atheism, Johnson and Reynolds add their voices to the increasing scholarly chorus that decries the real oppressor in these and related discussions: unexamined naturalistic presuppositions that reject alternative ideas without a hearing. . . . This volume is a treat to read, featuring a succinct, straightforward and easily digestible text that successfully treats issue after issue." -- Gary R. Habermas, Distinguished Research Professor, Liberty University and Theological Seminary

Asking the Right Questions

What is meant by the term "New Atheists," and how are they different from atheists of the past?

Can you explain what scientific naturalism is, and why you call it "the true oppressor in our time"?

Are religious people the only ones who rely on faith? Why are universities so reluctant to discuss faith?

Are earth's life-friendly qualities unique, or could there be life on other planets yet to be discovered?

What is the Darwinian worldview, and what are the implications for holding this position?

How can we know that the Bible (or any old book for that matter) is worth reading?

What is missing from today's university education?

What are the three reasons secularism is destructive, rather than freeing, to the human condition?

Phillip E. Johnson is recognized as the leading spokesman for the intelligent design movement, and he has taken his message to such places as the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal. He has appeared on Chuck Colson's "Breakpoint," on Business News Network's "Consumer Hotline" and on James Dobson's "Focus on the Family," among other shows. His IVP titles include Darwin on Trial, Reason in the Balance, The Wedge of Truth, The Right Questions, and Defeating Darwinism by Opening Minds.

John Mark Reynolds (Ph.D., University of Rochester) lectures frequently on ancient philosophy, philosophy of science, home schooling and cultural trends. He regularly appears on radio talk shows, such as the Hugh Hewitt Show, and actively blogs on cultural issues at ScriptoriumDaily.com and the Washington Post's On Faith column. His books include Three Views on Creation and Evolution (Zondervan).
